

1 WO

2

3

4

5

6

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

7

FOR THE DISTRICT OF ARIZONA

8

9

MANUEL DE JESUS ORTEGA)
MELENDRES, et al.,

No. CV-07-2513-PHX-GMS

10

Plaintiffs,

ORDER

11

vs.

12

13

MARICOPA COUNTY, et al.,

14

Defendants.

15

16

17

Pending before the Court is the Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings of Defendants Joseph M. Arpaio and the Maricopa County Sheriff's Office ("MCSO") (Dkt. # 90), Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Dkt. # 93), and Sheriff Arpaio and the MCSO's Motion for Leave to File Surreply and to Strike (Dkt. # 97). For the following reasons, the Court denies the Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings, denies without prejudice the Motion for Class Certification, and denies as moot the Motion for Leave to File Surreply and to Strike.¹

24

25

26

¹Both Plaintiffs and Defendants have requested oral argument. Those requests are denied because the parties have thoroughly discussed the law and the evidence, and oral argument will not aid the Court's decision. See Lake at Las Vegas Investors Group, Inc. v. Pac. Malibu Dev., 933 F.2d 724, 729 (9th Cir. 1991).

27

28

BACKGROUND

1
2 In this case, Plaintiffs have sued Sheriff Arpaio, the MCSO, and Maricopa County 3 (“the County”) for alleged violations of the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United 4 States Constitution; Article II, Section 8 of the Arizona Constitution; and Title VI of the Civil 5 Rights Act of 1964. (Dkt. # 26.) Plaintiffs are Somos America, an immigrant advocacy 6 group, and five Latino individuals, all of whom are either United States citizens or are 7 lawfully present in the United States. Each of the individual Plaintiffs has been stopped, 8 detained, questioned, and/or searched by MCSO officers, allegedly in violation of their 9 constitutional and statutory rights. According to the allegations in Plaintiffs’ Complaint, in 10 each of these instances the MCSO officers were acting pursuant to an officially-sanctioned 11 policy, pattern, and practice of racially profiling, targeting, or otherwise discriminating 12 against Latinos. Plaintiffs allege that this policy, pattern, and practice is manifested not only 13 on an impromptu basis, but also through “a series of massive so-called ‘crime suppression 14 sweeps.’” (Id. at 3.)

15 The details of each individual Plaintiff’s encounter with MCSO officers is discussed 16 in more detail in the Court’s prior Order denying Defendants’ motion to dismiss. (See Dkt.
17 # 60 at 2-6.) In brief, Plaintiff Manuel de Jesus Ortega Melendres was allegedly questioned, 18 searched, seized, handcuffed, and detained for several hours after the car in which he was a 19 passenger was stopped for speeding. The Caucasian driver of the car was never issued a 20 citation, and no apparent justification existed for detaining Ortega Melendres. He was 21 released hours later after an immigration official examined his visa.

22 Plaintiffs David and Jessica Rodriguez were allegedly stopped, detained, and 23 questioned by MCSO officers after driving on a damaged road. They were asked to provide 24 more identification than was requested of Caucasian drivers. Also, they were issued a 25 citation for not obeying a “road closed” sign, while the Caucasian drivers following them 26 were not. Plaintiffs deny, however, that there was such a sign on the stretch of road along 27 which they had traveled.
28

1 Plaintiffs Velia Meraz and Manuel Nieto, Jr., encountered an MCSO officer at a gas 2 station where the officer was interrogating two handcuffed suspects. When Plaintiffs Meraz
3 and Nieto pulled into the gas station, the officer directed them to leave. Plaintiffs allege that 4 they agreed to leave, but first asked for the officer's badge number, at which point he radioed
5 for backup. Plaintiffs Meraz and Nieto then drove away, but they were pursued by MCSO 6 officers and eventually pulled over in the parking lot of Nieto's family business. Mr. Nieto 7 was pulled from the car and detained, but he was released after producing identification. He 8 was not issued a citation.

9 In each of these episodes, Plaintiffs assert that they were targeted because they are 10 Latino. Plaintiffs thus seek, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, a 11 declaration that Defendants have engaged in racial profiling and discriminatory treatment of 12 Latino persons through illegal stops, detentions, questioning, searches, and arrests. Plaintiffs 13 also seek to enjoin Defendants from continuing to engage in discriminatory practices.
14 Plaintiffs do not seek monetary damages.

15 DISCUSSION

16 The Court will address each of the three pending motions in turn.

17 I. Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings

18 A. Legal Standard

19 "[T]he Court's role given the present procedural posture of the case is not to comment 20 upon the validity of [Plaintiffs'] claims but rather to decide if Plaintiffs have alleged facts 21 which if proved might entitle them to some or all of the relief they seek." Rodriguez v. Cal.
22 Highway Patrol, 89 F. Supp. 2d 1131, 1142 (N.D. Cal. 2000). Thus, a motion for judgment 23 on the pleadings pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(c) "is properly granted 24 when, taking all the allegations in the non-moving party's pleadings as true, the moving party 25 is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fajardo v. County of Los Angeles, 179 F.3d 698, 26 699 (9th Cir. 1999). Pleadings are to be "construed in the light most favorable to the 27 nonmoving party." Living Designs, Inc. v. E.I. Dupont de Nemours & Co., 431 F.3d 353, 28 360 (9th Cir. 2005). In ruling on a motion for judgment on the pleadings, the Court cannot

1 consider evidence outside the pleadings unless the Court treats the motion as a motion for 2 summary judgment pursuant to Federal Rule Civil Procedure 56. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(d).

3 B. Analysis

4 Defendants Arpaio and the MCSO argue that judgment on the pleadings should be 5 entered in their favor because Plaintiffs lack Article III standing to seek equitable remedies.
6 (Dkt. # 90 at 4-8.) Article III of the United States Constitution requires that a party be 7 advancing an actual case or controversy to invoke the jurisdiction of the federal courts. U.S.
8 Const. art. III, § 2, cl. 1 (extending the federal judicial power to various types of “Cases” and 9 “Controversies”); Flast v. Cohen, 392 U.S. 83, 94 (1968) (“[T]he judicial power of federal 10 courts is constitutionally restricted to ‘cases’ and ‘controversies.’”). The case-or-controversy 11 doctrine has many facets, but in the context of a party seeking injunctive relief it requires that 12 the party be “likely to suffer future injury.” City of Los Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U.S. 95, 105 13 (1983). Specifically, a plaintiff requesting an injunction against the repetition of past 14 unconstitutional conduct must “establish a real and immediate threat” that he will again be 15 subjected to the challenged conduct. See id.

16 The requirements for seeking equitable remedies are similar to those for establishing 17 standing under Article III. See id. at 103 (explaining that Article III’s case-or-controversy 18 considerations “obviously shade into those determining whether the complaint states a sound 19 basis for equitable relief”) (quoting O’Shea v. Littleton, 414 U.S. 488, 499 (1974)). To state 20 a claim for equitable relief, a plaintiff must establish “the likelihood of substantial and 21 immediate irreparable injury,” as well as “the inadequacy of remedies at law.” O’Shea, 414 22 U.S. at 502. Like Article III standing, the first prong of this test “cannot be met where there 23 is no showing of any real or immediate threat that the plaintiff will be wronged again.” 24 Lyons, 461 U.S. at 111. Where a future injury is merely “speculative,” and there is not “a 25 sufficient likelihood that [the plaintiff] will again be wronged in a similar way,” the Supreme 26 Court’s ruling in Lyons “requires a finding that this prerequisite of equitable relief has not 27 been fulfilled.” Id.

28

1 Thus, the essential question in this case is whether Plaintiffs' Complaint pleads a 2 sufficient likelihood of future injury to establish standing to seek equitable remedies. The 3 Ninth Circuit's decision in Hodgers-Durgin v. De La Vina, 199 F.3d 1037 (9th Cir. 1999), 4 is instructive on this point. In that case, two Latino plaintiffs brought a class action against 5 officials of the United States Border Patrol, alleging that they had been improperly stopped 6 as part of the defendants' "roving patrol operations." Id. at 1039. The plaintiffs sought both 7 a declaration that the Border Patrol's operations involved systemic violations of the United 8 States Constitution as well as an injunction prohibiting the allegedly unconstitutional 9 conduct. Id.

10 On appeal, the Ninth Circuit concluded that the plaintiffs had sufficiently asserted a 11 cognizable injury under Article III because they "did nothing illegal to prompt the stops by 12 the Border Patrol." Id. at 1041. Reasoning that Lyons was focused on those instances in 13 which a plaintiff's misconduct itself leads to the challenged activity, the Ninth Circuit 14 concluded that the Lyons rule is "based on the plaintiff's ability to avoid engaging in illegal 15 conduct." Id.; see also Armstrong v. Davis, 275 F.3d 849, 865 (9th Cir. 2001) (citing Lyons 16 for the proposition that "standing is inappropriate where the future injury could be inflicted 17 only in the event of future illegal conduct by the plaintiff"). Because the plaintiffs in 18 Hodgers-Durgin "engaged in entirely innocent conduct," they had sufficiently established 19 a case-or-controversy within the meaning of Article III. 199 F.3d at 1041. The Hodgers-
20 Durgin court also noted that, unlike Lyons, there was no "string of contingencies necessary 21 to produce an injury." Id. at 1041-42. Whereas future injury in Lyons "would have required 22 another stop by the police, followed by post-stop behavior culminating in a chokehold," in 23 Hodgers-Durgin "another stop of the sort alleged by plaintiffs would itself constitute further 24 injury." Id. at 1042. Thus, the Ninth Circuit found that Article III standing existed. Id.

25 Like the plaintiffs in Hodgers-Durgin, Plaintiffs here assert in their Complaint that 26 they did nothing illegal to prompt the stops, detentions, and other challenged activity. While 27 Defendants argue that "Plaintiffs admit or tacitly acknowledge that their encounters with 28 MCSO deputies were preceded by, or were the result of, violations of State or local law"

1 (Dkt. # 90 at 6-7), the Court disagrees. Plaintiffs make no explicit admission of wrongdoing.
2 In fact, the Complaint plainly alleges that Plaintiffs did “nothing wrong” and that 3 Defendants’ agents acted “without adequate cause.” (See, e.g., Dkt. # 26 at 5, 23.) As for 4 whether the facts described in the Complaint could be construed as a “tacit” admission that 5 Plaintiffs violated the law, on a Rule 12(c) motion the Court construes the Complaint in the 6 light most favorable to Plaintiffs. Living Designs, 431 F.3d at 360. Plaintiffs Ortega 7 Melendres, Meraz, and Nieto were not even issued citations, and Plaintiffs David and Jessica 8 Rodriguez dispute that the “road closed” sign they were cited for ignoring was posted along 9 the stretch of road on which they had traveled. From this, the Complaint could plausibly be 10 read to allege that Plaintiffs did nothing illegal to warrant the actions of MCSO officers.
11 Moreover, like Hodgers-Durgin, and unlike Lyons, there is no “string of contingencies” 12 necessary to reproduce the alleged injury. See Hodgers-Durgin, 199 F.3d at 1041-42. Just 13 as another stop, search, or interrogation would have itself constituted further injury in 14 Hodgers-Durgin, so too would that conduct constitute the repeated injury here. Plaintiffs 15 would not have to take any action, such as offering resistance, to reproduce the injury. See 16 Lyons, 461 U.S. at 105-06.²

17 Even viewed through the lens of the requirements for equitable relief, judgment would 18 still not be appropriate at this time. In Hodgers-Durgin, the evidence established that the 19 named plaintiffs drove hundreds of miles each week in close proximity to the Border Patrol, 20 yet each had been stopped only once in ten years. 199 F.3d at 1044. “Based on plaintiffs’ 21 own factual record,” the court held, “it is not sufficiently likely that [the plaintiffs] will again 22 be stopped by the Border Patrol.” Id. (emphasis added). Thus, the plaintiffs in Hodgers- 23 Durgin were unable to show the likely recurrence required to establish standing.

24
25
26 ²Defendants correctly argue that the mere fact that this case is brought as a purported 27 class action cannot remedy deficient standing. See LaDuke v. Nelson, 762 F.2d 1318, 1325 28 (9th Cir. 1985). However, for the reasons described above, the named Plaintiffs have made sufficient allegations to establish standing. Thus, Defendants’ argument does not justify granting judgment on the pleadings.

1 Here, by contrast, there is no factual record on which the Court could rely in making 2 such a determination. District courts within this circuit have recognized that Defendants' 3 arguments are more properly raised when courts have the benefit of an evidentiary record 4 (such as on summary judgment or upon an application for a preliminary injunction), rather 5 than at this early stage in the proceedings. See, e.g., Rodriguez, 89 F. Supp. 2d at 1142
6 (denying a motion to dismiss equitable claims in a racial profiling case because “the Court 7 based its decision in Lyons on a full evidentiary record, not the untested allegations of the 8 complaint,” and reasoning that “Plaintiffs are entitled to discovery to attempt to establish an 9 evidentiary basis for their claims for injunctive relief”); Bassette v. City of Oakland, No. C-10 00-1645, 2000 WL 33376593, at *6 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 11, 2000) (finding, in a case in which 11 plaintiffs sought an injunction against racial profiling, that dismissal of equitable claims for 12 failure to show a realistic threat of future injury was premature before development of a full 13 evidentiary record). As these cases point out, Lyons, Hodgers-Durgin, and the other relevant 14 authorities were all decided with the benefit of an evidentiary record.

15 In the absence of such a record, the Court must look to the Complaint, take its 16 allegations as true, and construe those allegations in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs.
17 See Fajardo, 179 F.3d at 699; Living Designs, 431 F.3d at 360. The Complaint alleges that, 18 at least as of 2007, Defendants have had an official policy, pattern, and practice of stopping, 19 questioning, searching, and sometimes arresting Latino persons without probable cause or 20 reasonable suspicion, simply on the basis of their race. The Complaint alleges that the 21 challenged conduct occurs not only as a general practice, but also through widespread and 22 ongoing “crime suppression sweeps.” The allegation that MCSO deputies were acting 23 pursuant to such a widespread, ongoing, and officially-sanctioned policy, practice, or pattern 24 of conduct lends special weight to the likelihood of future harm. See Armstrong, 275 F.3d 25 at 861 (explaining that one of the ways in which plaintiffs can “demonstrate that [an] injury 26 is likely to recur” is to “demonstrate that the harm is part of a pattern of officially sanctioned 27 behavior”) (internal quotations, ellipsis, and brackets omitted); Rodriguez, 89 F. Supp. 2d at 28 1142 (finding that plaintiffs who were seeking declaratory and injunctive relief for alleged

1 racial profiling survived a motion to dismiss and relying on the fact that, unlike Lyons, the 2 plaintiffs “allege[d] a pattern and practice of illegal law enforcement activity”); cf. Nelsen 3 v. King County, 895 F.2d 1248, 1254 (9th Cir. 1990) (“In those circumstances where we, or 4 the Supreme Court, have found standing to exist for a threat of future harm, it has 5 consistently been determined that some systematic pattern, repetition or relationship exists.”); 6 LaDuke, 762 F.2d at 1324 (distinguishing Lyons and relying in part on the district court’s 7 finding that “the defendants engaged in a standard pattern of officially sanctioned officer 8 behavior [that was] violative of the plaintiffs’ constitutional rights”). The Complaint in this 9 case illustrates these allegations with three instances in which five Plaintiffs were subjected 10 to the challenged conduct. Unlike Hodgers-Durgin, there is no evidence that these Plaintiffs, 11 though long exposed to MCSO scrutiny under the alleged policy, have nevertheless been left 12 alone, see 199 F.3d at 1044, nor is there any other evidence on which the Court could find 13 the Complaint’s assertions merely speculative. Thus, Plaintiffs’ Complaint is sufficient, in 14 the absence of an evidentiary record to the contrary, to allege a real and immediate threat that 15 Plaintiffs will again be wronged in a similar way.³

16 The Ninth Circuit has framed requests for declaratory relief as being subject to an 17 analogous ripeness requirement. See id. (“In suits seeking both declaratory and injunctive 18 relief against a defendant’s continuing practices, the ripeness requirement serves the same 19 function in limiting declaratory relief as the imminent-harm requirement serves in limiting 20 injunctive relief ‘A claim is not ripe for adjudication if it rests upon contingent future 21 events that may not occur as anticipated, or indeed may not occur at all.’”) (quoting Texas 22 v. United States, 523 U.S. 296, 300 (1998)). Thus, Plaintiffs’ request for a declaration that 23 Defendants have acted illegally survives for the same reason that Plaintiffs’ request that the 24

25
26 ³Defendants also argue that Plaintiffs’ decision not to seek a temporary restraining 27 order in this case “constitutes a tacit admission by them that they cannot demonstrate the 28 immediacy and direct/substantial elements necessary for the issuance of an injunction.”
(Dkt. # 90 at 8.) Defendants cite no authority for this proposition, and it does not logically follow. Thus, the Court will make no such inference.

1 Court enjoin such actions survives. See Rodriguez, 89 F. Supp. 2d at 1142 (finding that 2 claims for declaratory and injunctive relief brought by plaintiffs alleging a pattern and 3 practice of racial profiling survived a motion to dismiss for the same reasons).⁴

4 Defendants also invoke principles of federalism in arguing that the Court should grant 5 judgment on the pleadings. (Dkt. # 90 at 9.) In this context, respect for federalism is tied to 6 the exercise of equitable powers. “In exercising their equitable powers federal courts must 7 recognize ‘the special delicacy of the adjustment to be preserved between federal equitable 8 power and State administration of its own law.’” Lyons, 461 U.S. at 112 (quoting Stefanelli 9 v. Minard, 342 U.S. 117, 120 (1951)). Thus, “recognition of the need for a proper balance 10 between state and federal authority counsels restraint in the issuance of injunctions against 11 state officers engaged in the administration of the states’ criminal laws in the absence of 12 irreparable injury which is both great and immediate.” Id. (citing O’Shea, 414 U.S. at 499).

13 Thus, principles of federalism counsel restraint in the granting of injunctive relief 14 against state agencies. At this early stage in the litigation, however, principles of federalism 15 do not dictate that the Court should terminate this case. Just as it is emphatically the 16 province and duty of the judiciary to say what the law is, Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 17 Cranch) 137, 177 (1803), so too is it emphatically the province and duty of the judiciary to 18 vindicate the law where it has been violated, see Coolidge v. New Hampshire, 403 U.S. 443, 19 454 (1971) (“It is the duty of courts to be watchful for the constitutional rights of the citizen, 20 and against any stealthy encroachments thereon.”) (quoting Boyd v. United States, 116 U.S.
21 616, 635 (1886)); Bank of Hamilton v. Dudley’s Lessee, 27 U.S. (2 Pet.) 492, 524 (1829)

22
23
24 ⁴In their reply brief, Defendants argue for the first time that Plaintiffs have failed to 25 allege a sufficient injury-in-fact under the Fourth Amendment. (Dkt. # 108 at 5-6.) The 26 Court need not consider arguments raised for the first time in a reply brief. Zamani v.
27 Carnes, 491 F.3d 990, 997 (9th Cir. 2007). Regardless, Defendants’ argument is predicated 28 upon the notion that Plaintiffs have admitted that their encounters with MCSO deputies were preceded by violations of state or local law. (See Dkt. # 108 at 5.) Because, as explained above, the Court disagrees with that characterization of Plaintiffs’ Complaint, Defendants’ argument is unavailing.

1 (“The judicial department of every government is the rightful expositor of its laws; and 2 emphatically of its supreme law.”).

3 This principle requires enjoining constitutional violations that are likely to reoccur, 4 even if the subject of the injunction is a state agency entitled to respect, deference, and 5 latitude in conducting its own affairs. E.g., Armstrong, 275 F.3d at 879 (affirming the 6 injunction of a state prison board’s unconstitutional activities); see Hawkins v. Comparet- 7 Cassani, 251 F.3d 1230, 1237 (9th Cir. 2001) (recognizing the federalism concerns inherent 8 in enjoining a county sheriff’s use of stun belts but nevertheless finding standing because the 9 plaintiff had demonstrated the likelihood of future injury); cf. LaDuke, 762 F.2d at 1325 10 (“[T]he federal judiciary has been vested with the ultimate authority to determine the 11 constitutionality of the actions of the other branches of the federal government. While the 12 co-equal branches of the federal government are entitled to the widest latitude in the dispatch 13 of their own internal affairs, the executive branch has no discretion with which to violate 14 constitutional rights.”) (internal citations, quotations, and brackets omitted). Principles of 15 federalism are not offended by a court performing this essential function – “to conclude 16 otherwise would be to suggest that federal courts never ought to be concerned with the 17 activities of state agencies under any circumstances.” Rodriguez, 89 F. Supp. 2d at 1142.⁵

18 Taking all of Plaintiffs’ assertions as true, there are allegations of unconstitutional 19 conduct that, if proved, could merit equitable relief. Thus, judgment on the pleadings is not 20 appropriate at this time.

21 II. Motion for Class Certification

22 Plaintiffs make a motion for class certification (Dkt. # 93), which Defendants oppose 23 on a variety of grounds. (Dkt. ## 96, 100.) However, the Court need not resolve all of the 24 arguments for and against class certification at this time. As explained by the Supreme Court 25 in Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp., 527 U.S. 815 (1999), courts generally should resolve questions

27 ⁵Because of this ruling, the Court need not resolve Plaintiffs’ argument that principles 28 of federalism are not implicated here. (See Dkt. # 98 at 16.)

1 of standing before addressing class certification, for “this or any other Article III court must 2 be sure of its own jurisdiction before getting to the merits.” Id. at 831. The Fibreboard 3 Court announced an exception to that rule only where class certification issues are 4 prerequisites to standing. See id. (resolving class certification without first resolving 5 standing because “the class certification issues are . . . ‘logically antecedent’ to Article III 6 concerns, and themselves pertain to statutory standing, which may properly be treated before 7 Article III standing”) (internal citations omitted).

8 The Ninth Circuit has confirmed that Fibreboard did not change the general rule that 9 standing issues should be resolved before class certification. See Easter v. Am. W. Fin., 381 10 F.3d 948, 962 (9th Cir. 2004) (“The district court correctly addressed the issue of standing 11 before it addressed the issue of class certification. . . . Fibreboard does not require courts to 12 consider class certification before standing.”). Other courts have similarly recognized that, 13 with limited exceptions, a party’s standing should be resolved before class certification. See 14 In re Eaton Vance Corp. Sec. Litig., 220 F.R.D. 162, 165-66 (D. Mass. 2004) (collecting 15 post-Fibreboard cases and explaining that “standing is an inherent prerequisite to the class 16 certification inquiry” that must be analyzed prior to class certification issues); Clark v.
17 McDonald’s Corp., 213 F.R.D. 198, 204 (D.N.J. 2003) (noting that Fibreboard merely 18 announced “an exception to the usual rule that standing is a threshold question that must be 19 decided prior to class certification issues” and explaining that “the [Fibreboard] exception 20 treating class certification as the antecedent consideration does not apply if the standing issue 21 would exist regardless of whether the named plaintiff filed his claim alone or as part of a 22 class”).

23 The principle that standing should generally be decided before class certification does 24 not conflict with the rule that courts should determine whether to certify a suit as a class 25 action “[a]t an early practicable time.” See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(1)(A). The Ninth Circuit 26 has long-recognized that making such a determination may not be “practicable” until after 27 discovery has taken place. See Doninger v. Pac. Nw. Bell, Inc., 564 F.2d 1304, 1313 (9th 28 Cir. 1977) (“The propriety of a class action cannot be determined in some cases without 1 discovery”) (quoting Kamm v. Cal. City Dev. Co., 509 F.2d 205, 210 (9th Cir. 1975)).

2 “Whether or not discovery will be permitted in a case of this nature lies within the sound 3 discretion of the trial court.” Kamm, 509 F.2d at 209.

4 Here, as the Court’s discussion of the motion for judgment on the pleadings makes 5 clear, whether Plaintiffs have standing to seek the equitable remedies for which they demand 6 relief is an important question that cannot be ultimately resolved in the absence of an 7 evidentiary record. Whether Plaintiffs can establish standing in this case depends on whether 8 they can show a policy, pattern, or practice of racial discrimination sufficient to permit the 9 Court to make findings that Plaintiffs are personally subject to the likelihood of future harm.
10 See Armstrong, 275 F.3d at 861 (“Where a court, through its specific factual findings, 11 documents the threat of future harm . . . the possibility of recurring injury ceases to be 12 speculative, and standing is appropriate.”) (emphasis added and internal quotations omitted).
13 The Court can only make such findings after at least some discovery has taken place.
14 Plaintiffs do not argue, and it does not appear, that class certification is in any way a “logical 15 antecedent” to standing in this case. See Fibreboard, 527 U.S. at 831. Were the Court to 16 certify a class, and later determine that Plaintiffs do not have standing to advance this suit, 17 the Court would have inappropriately ruled on a matter over which it lacks jurisdiction. See 18 In re Merrill Lynch & Co., Inc., Research Reports Sec. Litig., 375 B.R. 719, 724 (S.D.N.Y.
19 2007) (“Under Article III’s standing requirement, ‘if the plaintiff loses standing at any time 20 during the pendency of the proceedings in the district court . . . the matter becomes moot, and 21 the court loses jurisdiction.’”) (quoting Altman v. Bedford Cent. Sch. Dist., 245 F.3d 49, 69 22 (2d Cir. 2001)). For these reasons, it would be premature for the Court to certify a class 23 while this essential question remains open to dispute. The Court therefore denies Plaintiffs’ 24 motion for class certification without prejudice to its being reasserted once the question of 25 Plaintiffs’ standing has been resolved.

26 III. Motion for Leave to File a Surreply and to Strike

27 Defendants Arpaio and the MCSO seek leave to file a surreply on the motion for class 28 certification. (Dkt. # 97 at 4.) The local rules make no provision for the filing of surreplies,

1 see LRCiv 7.2, and the issues currently pending before the Court have been adequately 2 briefed. The Court therefore denies the request to file a surreply. Defendants Arpaio and the 3 MCSO also move the Court to strike various portions of Plaintiffs' motion for class 4 certification. (Dkt. # 97 at 5.) In light of the Court's decision to deny the motion for class 5 certification at this time, Defendants' motion to strike is moot. It is therefore denied.

6 CONCLUSION

7 For the reasons described above:

8 IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings of 9 Defendants Arpaio and the MCSO (Dkt. # 90) is DENIED.

10 IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Dkt.
11 # 93) is DENIED without prejudice to its being reasserted once the issue of standing is 12 resolved.

13 IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Motion for Leave to File Surreply and to 14 Strike of Defendants Arpaio and the MCSO (Dkt. # 97) is DENIED.

15 DATED this 21st day of August, 2009.

16
17
18 _____
19 G. Murray Snow
20 United States District Judge
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28